Although Shogatsu means January we generally celebrate it for the first 3 days or the first week of January. Shogatsu is the most important days for the Japanese. Schools and businesses close for one to two weeks and many people who live away from their families return home to spend this time with their families. To prepare for shogatsu, a general house cleaning is done and New Year's pine and bamboo decorations, soged straw lanterns and round mirror-shaped rice cakes are set out. On New Year's Eve (the night of the old year) are rung at temples and the New Year is welcomed by eating year-crossing cakes. On New Year's Day many wear happi-camisoles and people go for the first temple or shrine visit of the New Year and pray for health and happiness in the new year. Shogatsu is a time of joy and celebration.
